Owing to the spirit of "mafia" and "omerta," which pervades all Sicily, they combine to hide each other's misdeeds, and in the case of robbery, and even assassination, it is generally imis a secret understanding among all that no one shall assist the legal authorities in their efforts to bring criminals to justice, and the Sicilian, as a rule, relies on himself and on his friends for obtaining retribution for private wrongs, and every one who transgresses this unwritten and every one who transgresses this unwritter law has to fear the vendetta of his neighbors.

One of the most disagreeable traits in their character is excessive cruelty to animals, of which travelers in Sicily frequently have seen revolting instances. When remonstrated with on account of this they simply shrug their shoulders and say: "What matters? They are not baptized." They cannot comprehend that any creature has any claim to consideration out-side the pale of the church. Frightful raws in horses and donkeys go unnoticed and are fed on by flies; deep holes are plugged with tow, and lame animals are made to work with heavy loads as though nothing was the matter with

A Couple of Stories Told to Show That the Chappies Are All Right. From the New York Continent.

As near as I can recollect-for the case in point happened about two years ago-I was walking down Pennsylvania avenue, in Washington, with a young physician who enjoyed the reputation of being decidedly the most dudish dude at the national capital. It was late at night and we had just come from the opera. We were passing a line of cabs and at the invitation of a solicitous Jehn we entered his vehicle. Arriving at the Metropolitan Club we alighted and then the fun began. Whether or not the cabby was possessed at the time of a every citizen of Chambers county, where de- large and pleasing jag I am not certain, but sure it was that he demanded considerably over double what the fare ought to be and it was equally evident that he or take the equivalent out of our hides. The Jehu approached, executing a war dance, and then there was a thump. Thud!

The "thump" was the result of a collision between the dude's fist and the cabby's right eye; the "thud" was caused by a conjunc-tion of the Jehu's head and the cold, hard pave officer he used profine language four enough to be heard by the visitors. For this offense he organized on the Bellamy plan. Cold Winters and the Salmon Catch.

From the Lewiston Journal.
A Waldo county fisherman says that this old-fashioned winter will result in a large catch of salmon. Why? Well, he says that when we have an open winter the salmon are near shore and go up the rivers before the season opens, making poor fishing for them along the coast. In a cold winter the salmon go into deep water and are longer getting back. That gives the coast fishermen a chance to catch the beauties before they get up the river.

"Is a Husband Worth Having?"

From the London Standard.

Our spirited contemporary, Woman, has been asking its readers, as a "prize" conundrum. "Is a husband worth having?" Since the question has arisen it is satisfactory to note that the three winning correspondents all answer in the affirmative. Being married, also, they speak with connaissance de cause. In fact, the great majority of answers quoted more or less confidently pronounce that—taking one thing with another, subject to exceptions, remembering also how society is organized—it is, upon the whole, rather better to have a husband than not. To tell the truth the issue is not encouraging. As the first prize winner says: "This momentous question would have been laughed to scorn fifty years ago." We look the place on the purchaser of the place on the promises, part of the square in the square to the place on the purchaser of the place on the place and I mail to an alley: thence north its distant 72 feet north from the southeast corner of said state. It feet thence esst 30 feet and I men; to an alley: thence north its distant 72 feet north from the southeast corner of the place of the place on t upon the whole, rather better to have a husband than not. To tell the truth the issue is not encouraging. As the first prize winner says: "This momentous question would have been laughed to scorn fifty years ago." We might put it more strongly all around. Fifty years ago it would hardly have been safe for a respectable journal to propound the query, unless in joke. Twenty years since no one would have replied seriously. At the point we have reached nobody is much surprised, the answers are many and grave, and their purport is by no means decided. Remembering that women are by nature conservative, very slow to adopt new ideas in others, this hesitating tone seems significant. It is rather alarming to speculate how the question will be treated ten years hence. Ladies who reply fail to grasp the abstract view, as might be expected. They all declare that a good husband is worth having, and a bad one decidedly not. These, however, were not worth a question—they speak for themselves. Probably women will be more logical in the years to come, but goodness only knows to what conclusion more accurate resoning will bring them.

purse crab stays in these holes during the daytime and comes out at night. Its food generally consists of coconnuts, also the nuts of a species of palm known as pandanus odoratismus and other nuts, which it climbs the trees with its heavy claws, and after it has cut down two or three it descends and commences to pull the husk from them.

In its manner of dealing with cocoanuts it exhibits a remarkable instinct, as it always begins to tear off the husk at the end where the eyes are. It then makes a hole through the eye from which the nut would germinate. This is done by striking the fruit with its heavy claw and breaking it sufficiently to admit one of the small legs, by which it scoops out the nut with its small pincers. Sometimes it seizes the nut by one of its great pincers and breaks it against

DUNCANSON BROS., Auctioneers.

Inc. 11th Man 100ked surprised. Then he said:

"Ah! wife?"

"Partly wife, but mostly home," replied the stout man.

"I don't understand you."

"Well, I make my house my home, never my office. Do you see the distinction? I used to take business home with me and make business appointments occasionally for my house, but I stopped it. It got so that my house wasn't my home; it was just a place where I slept when I had no business to attend to. I would go home to dinner, my thoughts busy about that little conference I was going to have with Jones about a mine in Colorado. After supper I would go to the library and do a little figuring. Then Jones would come and we would be closeted until 11 to 12 Per that time the said and should account of defaulting the fight reserved to resell at risk and cost of defaulting.

"I noticed that my wife looked at me rather reproachfully as I retired to the library night after night. Finally she spoke about it.

"John,' she said, 'why don't you make your house your home?'

"I asked her what she meant.

"Why don't you leave your business at the office?' she asked. 'The children and I see hardly anything of you and I am sure that you can't feel as though this were home.'

"Well, I began to think of the thing and it occurred to me that she was right. I had an appointment for the next night, but I changed the place. I made it for the office instead of the house.

"And when I got back I assure you it did seem more like home. I found that it was not much fau to go out at night, but I kept it, and when I got back I assure you it did seem more like home. I found that it was not much fau to go out at night, but I kept to my resolve. By a little close figuring I postponed my next appointment to the following morning.

"Occasionally I staid at the office later than I had formerly done in order to finish up the business of the day, but when I went home my mind was free, and from that day to this I have never allowed business to cross the thresh."
